

own. He gave all who assisted him in making the flags 25c each, irrespective of the work they did. He said he had no objection to paying people for their lives; he had no objection to paying people for their lives; he had no objection to paying people for their lives...

the evening on the 10th, at the Royal Hotel, where the flying black flag was hoisted. Mr. Edwards was introduced to me as agent, and a lot of members of the Liberal party were present. He said he had a great deal of money to spend on the election...

who lived at Canterbury, Margate, and Ashford, 21 1/2c. He paid twenty voters 25c each. He told me that he had a great deal of money to spend on the election. He said he had a great deal of money to spend on the election...

Mr. Jones: You were "all in the Downs," also. I saw it in the Liberal. (Laughter.) Mr. Jones: That's the Liberal. (Laughter.) G. Rodman, the landlord of the True Briton and G. Rodman, the landlord of the True Briton and G. Rodman, the landlord of the True Briton...

At the 1875 election he was promised money to vote for the Liberal, but did not get it. He therefore paid them back this time. (Laughter.) Mr. Jones: You were "all in the Downs," also. I saw it in the Liberal. (Laughter.)

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11th.

G. Downes, the landlord of the Star and Garter, received a letter from Mr. Jones on the 10th, which was for his hire of rooms, and £20 for refreshment. That was for 11 days. He was to have the same as he had on the 10th.

Mr. Jones: I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children. I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children.

Mr. Jones: I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children. I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children.

Mr. Jones: I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children. I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children.

Mr. Jones: I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children. I suppose all the tradesmen expected an order from me, and everybody else—men, women, and children.